Starting today, GE makes it hard to goof up pictures.

General Electric announces the Bluecoat with the Green Dots. A better flashcube for better color snapshots.

THE GREEN DOT. Every GE

Bluecoat has four green dots, that act as automatic signal dots to keep track of the flashes for you. When a dot shows green, it means the bulb has not been used. Flash, it turns black. No more guessing. No more missing pictures. Now, you can easily see how many shots you have left.

THE BLUE COAT. Now the cube is blue all over, because we put the color in the cover instead of on each bulb. That's to give you better color snapshots than you ever got before.

Now, picture after picture, the color will be great.

THE BLACK DOT.

When a bulb is flashed, the green dot turns black, showing at a glance the bulb's been used.

No more goof-ups. No more accidentally trying to get five flashes out of a four-flash cube.

The new GE Bluecoat with the Green Dots. The first flashcube that makes it hard to goof up pictures.

To the Children of the World,
Kirk Douglas Tells

'The Legend of Silent Night'

The story of "Silent Night," the beloved Christmas carol, is, or should be, pretty well-known by now—how, in the small Austrian town of Oberndorf on the Salzach, the poem written by Josef Mohr was put to music by Franz Gruber on Christmas Eve, 1818. The classic is going to be retold by Kirk Douglas and acted by James Mason (as Gruber) and John Leyton (as Mohr), Christmas Night on ABC. The dramatics were filmed mostly in the Austrian village where it all really happened, but Douglas, as can be seen on these pages, will narrate from a television studio in the United Nations Building and will read his narration to children of delegates and UN personnel. The program format will vary between Douglas reading to the children, the dramatic presentation in Austria and the UN Choir (augmented by Mr. Douglas) singing a number of international carols, including, one would expect, "Stille Nacht."

'To bolster and to sustain'

Mrs. Johnson explains the job of the First Lady in an unusual special.

By Edith Efron

A cathedral-like hush fills the Oval Room in the White House. The pale-yellow chamber with its glittering chandelier and gleaming antiques is the site of a technological mob scene—and yet it is utterly silent. ABC technicians glide between the gigantic cameras, step like velvet-pawed cats over the chaos of cables, hold conferences in soundless voices.

"I'm very thrilled about this project," whispers Tom Wolf, ABC vice president in charge of documentaries. "This is the first time any First Lady has been willing to explain her role. We feel it has the potential of being a true historical document."

"We're trying for a very broad portrait," whispers executive producer Lester Cooper. "Every American First Lady is different, but there are things in common to all of them. We're after that universal quality."

Lady Bird Johnson walks into the hushed room, graceful and smiling. With her brunette hair and a mint-green dress she stands out vividly against the delicate yellow background.

President Johnson walks past, as his wife and Howard K. Smith work on their TV special.

For an instant all the men in the room stop dead in their tracks and stare at her. This is an American First Lady.

Howard K. Smith rises from the couch where he has been sitting quietly and conducts her to the delicate little French chairs in which they will hold their first conversations. "We know that the Presidency is a job," he says. "Do you ever think that being the First Lady is a job?"

It takes two days of filming to answer this key question. And for a substantial part of that time Mrs. Johnson succeeds in remaining on the requisitely abstract level.

Over and over again she reveals profound reverence for this Nation, its symbols and traditions: "They strike up the national anthem . . . and when you hear it you stand two feet taller. . . ."

And over and over again she provides moving insights into the life of a First Executive's family: her main job is to "bolster and sustain" her husband, to give him an "island of serenity" as a refuge from the constant tension of his existence. "The strain of the responsibility . . . it's an eroding thing," she says.

Her personal life is hard. Often she does not see her husband until 11 o'clock at night. "I hear the three rings on the elevator. That is the sign that he's coming. Then I hear his voice say, 'Where's Bird?,' and I know that the day has ended."

She has trouble with only one issue—her personal feelings when the Chief Executive is under attack. Howard Smith asks her if these attacks hurt her. She denies it at first, then admits it, then modifies the admission. Her final answer on tape is revealingly contradictory: "Yes. . . . But the important thing is not to be immobilized. . . ."

Mrs. Johnson and Smith converse in a sitting room.

It hurts some, but not deeply."

To a sensitive degree Mrs. Johnson does project an archetypal First Lady—the intimate friend and ally of the awesomely solitary Chief of State. And in this capacity she generates very strong emotions in the ABC people who are working behind the scenes. The video operators, the cameramen, the researchers, the newsmen—all are in the grip of an intense patriotic feeling. Executive producer Lester Cooper blurts out characteristically: "I met the First Lady for the first time this morning. . . . Lester Cooper, a little Jewish boy from Mount Vernon, N.Y. . . . Somebody said 'I want you to meet the First Lady.' I stood there like a kid. I couldn't even say anything. I just stood there."

Everyone is fascinated by the collective enthralment. "There's a certain tension when you shoot in the White House," reflects Tom Wolf. "It's the mystique of the White House itself. Everyone feels it. Howard Smith has been here as much as anyone alive, and he still feels it."

Howard Smith nods. "It's always thrilling to be here," he says softly. "Always."

"The President of the United States, no matter whether you are for him or against him, is an awesome figure," continues Wolf. "This awe permeates everything. You've seen crews on location. There's always a lot of banter, a lot of noise. Here—it's soundless. Look at the way I'm talking to you. I'm whispering!"

There is no question but that the awe inspired by this House and its residents is nonpartisan. As Lester Cooper puts it, "None of this has anything to do with politics. It has to do with what this country's all about. What it means. These people aren't Democrats or Republicans once they are in that White House. They're . . . the President of the United States and the First Lady."

Only once is this rarefied perspective cracked. During a break in the shooting, ABC people negotiate eagerly with Liz Carpenter, the First Lady's press secretary. "Could the President just stick his head in?" someone asks. "If we could just get his head, we'd be satisfied." And Liz wisecracks, "Oh, you want more than that of him. Everybody's had his head already."

Liz's raucous little political joke resounds like the echo of a bad dream. Within these hallowed halls Lyndon B. Johnson is the President, endowed with his own archetypal attributes. And, as time passes, awareness of his presence somewhere in these very rooms grows intense. When people finally do catch glimpses of him, during the two days of filming, they are uninhibitedly excited. "I saw him! I saw the President!" whispers ABC publicity man Dave Horowitz. "Look at my hands! They're shaking! He just walked down the hall. He's handsome. I swear he's handsome!"

The greatest beneficiary of this nonpartisan reverence, however, is the omnipresent First Lady. Interest runs high in every detail of what she says and does. The aspect of this charming Southern gentlewoman that increasingly absorbs everyone is an attribute to which the press has been strangely inattentive—her unusually high intelligence.

It is dramatically displayed in this situation. A White House documentary is always a collaborative project, with the White House resident serving as ultimate editor. And however one may question the principle of such a procedure, it is a fascinating experience to witness the First Lady's mental processes. She is an excellent editor, logical and analytical, constantly striving for coherence and lucidity, and she has a high degree of objectivity on her own performance. She watches replays of tape and makes such comments as: "Bad. That wasn't responsive to the question." And: "There's too much smiling going on." And: "I must say, that wasn't a very glittering remark!" She is a perfectionist, highly organized, and she works more intensively than anyone else there. "She's smart. God, she's smart," whispers Lester Cooper. "She has the manner of Melanie—but the mind of Scarlett," quips Liz Carpenter softly.

Unfortunately, this working intelligence will not be as visible on the screen. Indeed, it is most manifest in the behind-the-scenes struggle over the duller part of the documentary. The planned "climax" of the film is a survey of the First Lady's achievements. But there is something about the resurrection of the Head Start program and the Beautification program in this context that is alarmingly anticlimactic. In fact, it is worse than anticlimactic. As the concrete details of these much-publicized projects on education, water pollution, etc., unroll flatly and inexorably before us, they shroud the archetypal First Lady in dreariness. Mrs. Johnson struggles and struggles to stylize the content but her effort is in vain.

A subtle anxiety fills the atmosphere in the White House. Fatigue shows up on the ABC faces. Whispered con- → ferences are constant. "This is what we were afraid of," whispers an ABC informant. "There is no way to make this tired rehash of old political news inspiring. We've all been afraid the whole thing might end up looking like dull PR for a dead Administration."

This is precisely the effect this "climatic" segment is having. And quite suddenly—before the original noble vision can be restored—the taping is over. "Maybe we can jack up the level in the editing," says the ABC person glumly.

Everyone sags in exhaustion and in concealed frustration. Slowly the principals make their farewells. And after a while, only the technicians remain to clear the Presidential living quarters of machinery.

Liz Carpenter approaches us and confirms our request for an interview with Mrs. Johnson. "She'll have a drink with you," says Liz. "Follow me." And so we follow . . . and find ourselves in an exquisite little Victorian study that once belonged to Abraham Lincoln. The potent magic of the White House reclaims us. And while we sit there, thrilled, on Lincoln's chair, in walks the First Lady of the Land. And we interview her on the only subject that seems appropriate for an archetypal First Lady—America.

How, we ask her, does she interpret the intense reverence with which she has been surrounded for two days? "I understand it," she says quietly. "It is not a response to me personally. It's a response to the wife of the President, to the office of the Presidency. It's a response to the House. You're in a place in which you have an awe that amounts almost to reverence. You're startled to be in this intimate relation with it. I remember feeling exactly that way myself. When I first moved into the White House, I, too, tiptoed around and whispered. It's really reverence for the country."

What does she revere about America? "It's hard to put into words, my love for America," she says slowly. "It's symbolized by . . . well, do you remember those lines of Thomas Wolfe? I can't quote them exactly but they're about this land where every man can rise to his own potential. Great, lyrical lines . . . That's what America is for me. This is a country where you can stretch yourself to the limit of your mental and spiritual ability to be stretched . . . where you can come from poverty, from degradation, to the height of achievement. I feel a fierce, roaring pride in this country."

How does she feel about the current antipatriots who do not share her pride? "My response to them would be anger," the First Lady says calmly, "if it were not for pity." Pity for what? "Pity for their deprivation. It's as if they are purposely going hungry in a land of plenty."

What in her opinion is causing this assault on America? Her face grows disturbed, her eyes darken. "These people have mindlessly accepted a dangerous fashion of the day. Somebody is leading these people into these attitudes. It's all so dangerous. So dangerous. It could bring about a tremendous wave of authoritarianism, in sheer reaction."

And then the First Lady leans forward and bursts out in a genuine passion: "I cannot understand it! How can you not love this country? How can you not love America?"

Lincoln's little study resonates with her cry. There is nothing more to ask, nothing more to say.

It's sad for the sake of the departing Mrs. Johnson, and for the sake of the public, that this scene will not be on the screen. There are some who would not have cared for it. But for most people, who also hold America as a basic touchstone of their souls, the sight of a First Lady's unbridled love of Nation would have been a moving and an eternally memorable experience. "Forget the free gift, who's that groovy chick in your Chevron Island commercials?" asked a motorist about the undulating starlet whose saturation spots for Standard Oil in California are piling up saturation residuals for Irene Tsu, Oriental Blurb Star of the Year.

Her TV spots are generating more job offers than all her one-shots on I Spy, The Wild Wild West, Laredo, Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea and The Man from U.N.C.L.E. ever did. Possibly because she at last is doing her own thing, which is dancing. Irene's ambition as a child in Hong Kong was to be a ballerina. Today the Prima Ballerina of Blurbs is wiggling her torso on some stations as many as 16 times a day.

This cool Oriental was once too hot for the censors. The National Catholic Office for Motion Pictures persuaded 20th Century-Fox to slice a three-and-one-third-second strip of film from a Doris Day picture showing Irene diving into a swimming pool where the impact dislodged the bottom half of her bikini. "I thought at the time, oh, gee, this is going to slip, so I had one hand holding it. The director said, 'Don't dive with one hand. It looks ridiculous. If anything happens, we won't use it.' So naturally they used it."

Irene Tsu

Miss Tsu, pronounced "Dzoo" (Americans, she says, are always mispronouncing it "tissue"), was born in Shanghai in 1943.

When she was 5, her family, including her younger sister Florence who is now a dancer in Canada, fled Shanghai when the Communists took over. Their escape was engineered by her father, Z.M. Tsu, who held a post as Nationalist proconsul in charge of U.S. aid to Chiang Kai-shek's regime. "We lived in constant fear. We always had people following us." She spent her pre-teen years in Hong Kong in a household where her two grandmothers quarreled fanatically about religion. "My father's side was Buddhist, but the Christian missionaries got to my mother's side." Her parents now live in New York, where her father is an investment counselor and her mother is a textile designer. At age 13, she went to Marimoneck Junior High School near her then home in Larchmont, Westchester County, New York, where there were only two Oriental families in the whole town.

"I couldn't recognize anybody. All Americans looked the same to me. It was like the old saying, 'All Orientals look alike.' I didn't know there were Negroes in America. I thought all → Americans looked like William Holden." Adjusting to her new environment wasn't easy. "The girls in Larchmont were terribly grown up. All they ever did was talk about boys and cosmetics. I was really left out."

Irene grew up fast. At 15, she was a dancer in the road company of "The World of Susie Wong." She danced in the movie version of "Flower Drum Song." She was one of 18 handmaidens to Elizabeth Taylor in "Cleopatra." She was chosen by John Wayne to play the only girl in his movie "The Green Berets." She played a South Vietnamese who seduced and betrayed a Viet Cong general. "My friends refused to see me in the picture because they disapproved of my part. It was bombed by the critics. One reviewer said, 'We've dropped so many bombs in Vietnam, one more wouldn't hurt.' But they loved it in Atlanta."

Irene likes living in Southern California where she has a house of her own in Benedict Canyon decorated in "eclectic" style, including some old burnt-orange lacquered trunks her family brought out from Shanghai. She cooks hot, spicy Chinese foods. She paints in oils. She studies sculpting evenings at UCLA. She makes a lot of her clothes. "I bought a man's Nehru shirt from India, richly embroidered, and with little mirrors on it, that I made into a dress."

She doesn't date much. "I go out, but I think once a week is too much." For companionship she has a gray cat, "mostly Siamese," called Dorian. Is she lonely? "Oh, always. Good friends are hard to come by. I enjoy being by myself. I don't really mind it."

Irene is a frequent cover girl in Europe, where exotic types are in vogue, and she makes the Hong Kong periodicals all the time. Only the U.S. press has been slow to recognize her visual excitement.

President-elect Scores TV Hit

But for his slip-up in failing to identify by name Maurice Stans as his Secretary of Commerce appointee, President-elect Nixon carried off his three-network "meet my Cabinet" TV special with a happy aplomb that went far to dispel any lingering doubts about his self-assurance in front of the TV cameras. Obviously relishing the moment, the incoming Chief Executive introduced his team extemporaneously, without notes, cue cards or TelePrompTer. "It was a remarkable performance," CBS News Washington bureau chief Bill Small, overseer of the TV pool, commented. "He showed a great deal of cool." Mr. Nixon's "virtuoso performance," as newsman Roger Mudd dubbed it, immediately touched off speculation that the next White House occupant will make far more use of TV than had been anticipated. A TV official with high GOP credentials predicted: "You're going to see TV used as no President has used it before, to talk to the people — and with them." He thought Mr. Nixon "really meant it" when he said on his election-eve telethon he hoped to do meet-the-citizens programs like that after he became President. His Cabinet preview was a solid ratings success: An estimated 50 million persons watched it.

When Apollo 8 streaks towards its South Pacific splashdown after circling the moon, "there's just a chance" TV viewers will see the fireball effect of the spacecraft heating up from hitting the earth's atmosphere, according to NBC News producer Jim Kitchell. "It would look like a big shooting star," he says. Reason: if the splashdown is on schedule it will occur in the pre-dawn darkness of Dec. 27.

NBC, incidentally, has come up with a novel twist in TV coverage of the moon mission: in cooperation with the Denver Museum of Natural History Planetarium, an attempt will be made to track Apollo 8 visually all the way to the moon and back with a TV-equipped telescope.

CBS finally unveiled its long-heralded EVR (for electronic video recorder), a cartridge device that plays 52 minutes of programming into a TV set from a seven-inch reel of 8.75 mm. film. Motorola will produce the EVR players beginning in 1970 and initially for hospital, school and industrial uses. Later, in quantity production, the gadget could become a component of home-entertainment rigs. The CBS device, however, if a trade rumor is correct, may be just one jump ahead of tough foreign competition. Dutch and Japanese scientists reportedly are close to perfecting phonograph-like disks that will record and play back TV pictures.

PBL, the Sunday night try-anything series on noncommercial TV, will try in 90 minutes next February to give viewers a broad look at what the near future may hold for them in wired (vs. over-the-air) and satellite TV. Sure to loom large in the assess-

Once again it's that movies-to-address - early - or - belated - Christmas - cards - by time, with enough variety to bemuse even the most reluctant seasonal correspondent.

If you're after a musical accompaniment, there are 15-count 'em—Irrving Berlin numbers in "White Christmas" to make the fifth annual telecast of this 1954 film tolerable. It's that old standard about the two ex-GIs—Bing Crosby and Danny Kaye (and yes indeed, we all looked that young 15 years ago)—who decide to give their lonely old general a merry Christmas. Rosemary Clooney and Vera-Ellen are on hand to add song and dance as a sister act, and the whole thing is relaxed and sentimental and pleasant enough.

If you like a war-whoops-and-bullets accompaniment, there's "The Great Sioux Massacre," a flashback account of the "true" facts behind Custer's last stand, with Indians and Cavalymen biting the dust to a faretheewell. Phil Carey is Custer; Joseph Cotten and Darren McGavin his subordinates who live to tell the tale that adds up to a sort of B-plus Western. On the Eastern front, there's "East of Sudan," a stock jungle adventure set in the 1880's, with a trio of Britishers and a young native girl fleeing the forces of Mahdi (shades of "Khartoum"—but very pale shades). It's action-filled but all too obviously studio-made.

Some programmer's quirk has made "The Smugglers" the Christmas Eve movie, a tailored-for-television unknown quantity that may help you pass the time until the kids are out of the way—or get your Christmas tree decorated early on. There's something oddly unseasonal, however, in this story involving Shirley Booth and Carol Lynley as an American mother and stepdaughter abroad who become dupes of a smuggling ring, a tale complete with murder and mayhem. For those who prefer this sort of thing after Christmas, there's "The House of the Seven Hawks," a tidy unpretentious little thriller with Robert Taylor as the tough gent who figures and fights his way through an international puzzle involving stolen Nazi treasure. There's good plotting and performance down the line.

No just-folks film? Well, there's "The Pad," Ross Hunter's 1966 version of Peter Shaffer's one-act play, "The Private Ear." Nothing survives of Shaffer's delicate playlet: what Hunter creates is strictly for the Rock Hudson-Doris Day school of sex comedy, juxtaposed in a Hollywood version of low-income living which is, to put it politely, preposterous. And so is the fact that the three principals, all looking post-30 and untrustable, attempt to mug about like late-teeners. Ah well. For Christmas night, at least, there's a special instead of a movie, with Kirk Douglas narrating "The Legend of Silent Night," a dramatization of the writing of the carol, and James Mason portraying Franz Gruber, the composer.

Details of the mission and network plans for TV coverage

"I believe that this Nation should commit itself to achieving the goal, before this decade is out, of landing a man on the moon and returning him safely to the earth."

—John F. Kennedy

This week the U.S. takes a giant step toward achieving the goal set forth by President Kennedy in 1961.

At press time, the six-day mission of Apollo 8 was planned as a manned-flight "first," calling for three astronauts to make a departure from earth orbit on a venture into space.

The objective: approach the moon, achieve an orbit and remain there for 20 hours before returning to earth.

The Astronauts

Air Force Colonel Frank Borman (the command pilot), who also flew the Gemini 7 mission.

Navy Captain James A. Lovell Jr., who was with Colonel Borman aboard Gemini 7. Lovell also flew the Gemini 12 mission and has more time in space than any other astronaut or Soviet cosmonaut.

Air Force Major William A. Anders, who is making his first space flight.

As in all previous missions, NASA has a backup crew ready to go should Borman, Lovell or Anders be grounded.

The Mission

The flight plan of Apollo 8 is divided into five major areas.

Phase 1: the giant Saturn V rocket—on its first manned flight—is scheduled to lift off from Cape Kennedy's pad 39 on Saturday morning. The first stage (with 7.5 million pounds of thrust) will fire for about two and one-half minutes, lifting the rocket to an altitude of 41 miles. The first stage then drops away, leaving the second stage (one million pounds thrust) to fire for six and one-half minutes, reaching an altitude of 121 miles. Following burnout and separation, the third stage takes over, with 200,000 pounds of thrust to kick the Apollo spacecraft into a "parking" orbit 115 miles above the earth.

Phase 2: following one or two orbits, the astronauts re-ignite the third-stage engine to leave orbit on a course for the moon. The 240,000-mile trek should take approximately 66 hours. Along the way, the astronauts will make several midcourse corrections. (The third stage will drop off, dump its remaining fuel and eventually go into a solar orbit.)

Phase 3: early Tuesday morning, Apollo will near the moon and enter an elliptical orbit (approximately 69 by 196 miles). A few hours later, the astronauts will shift to a circular orbit 69 miles above the lunar surface. During the next 16 hours, Apollo will continue to orbit the moon (two hours per revolution) while the astronauts take photos and navigational fixes for future lunar landing sites.

Phase 4: Wednesday morning (EST), a rocket engine aboard the spacecraft will be fired to take Apollo out of its lunar orbit. After this "trans-earth injection," the astronauts will make their return trip in about 57 hours.

Phase 5: on Friday morning, Apollo will enter the earth's atmosphere at an altitude of 400,000 feet. The primary splashdown area is 750 to 1000 miles south of Hawaii. On hand for the recovery will be the aircraft carrier USS Yorktown.

In addition to the usual risks of space flight, a general area of concern centers on the astronauts' operating at great distances from the earth. In earlier missions, they have been no more than three hours away from splashdown and recovery. For Apollo 8, the time factor stretches to a maximum of three days.

Specific concern focuses on three crucial points in this mission: maneuvering into lunar orbit (an error could send Apollo far into space); leaving lunar orbit (engine failure would strand the astronauts without hope for recovery); and entering the earth's atmosphere (an approach angle too steep would result in Apollo's burning up; a shallow approach would send the capsule skipping off the atmosphere back into space, with no way for the astronauts to attempt another entry).

If the liftoff is postponed Saturday, it can be attempted on any day between Sunday and Friday. Also: mission objectives could be changed at any point due to conditions affecting the astronauts or equipment. In no case, however, could an attempt be made to land an astronaut on the moon. (The Apollo spacecraft will not carry the lunar landing module.)

TV Coverage

Apollo will carry a TV camera for transmission to earth. Relay times have been scheduled, but could be postponed or cancelled. First, a high-gain antenna aboard the spacecraft must be up and functioning for the relay to take place. Second, a delay of the launch or of various stages during the mission would alter the times. Third, equipment malfunctions and other conditions could force the astronauts to attend to more pressing matters.

As we went to press, the transmission times were scheduled as follows:

Sunday, 11:58 A.M.: telecast from Apollo en route to the moon.

Monday, 12:06 P.M.: second telecast en route.

Tuesday, 4:35 A.M.: Apollo orbits the moon. 6:27 P.M.: second telecast from lunar orbit.

Wednesday, 1:17 P.M.: en route to earth.

Thursday, 12:51 P.M.: second telecast en route to earth.

The networks will cover significant developments at any time during the mission. Plans call for bulletins, progress reports and extended coverage surrounding key operations.

Correspondents will be stationed at Cape Kennedy, the Manned Spacecraft Center in Houston, aboard the Yorktown and at North American Rockwell in Downey, Cal., where Apollo was built.

In addition to showing mockups of the Apollo capsule and explaining the orbital mechanics of the mission, the networks plan analyses of the significance of this journey into space.

Anchor men: Jules Bergman, Frank Reynolds, ABC; Walter Cronkite, CBS; Chet Huntley, David Brinkley, Frank McGee, NBC.

STAR TREK'S KISS

Lieutenant Uhura, depicted by black actress Nichelle Nichols, and Captain Kirk, as played by white actor William Shatner, actually kissed during a recent episode of Star Trek. 11:00 5 8 10 12 NFL WESTERN CHAMPIONSHIP

SPECIAL COLOR Colts vs. Central Division titlists (at press time, either the Chicago Bears or Minnesota Vikings) at Baltimore. Jack Buck and Pat Summerall report. (Live)

Bears. Unimpressive on offense and defense, the Bears nevertheless had a chance for the title. QB Jack Concannon (11) has returned to health, Brian Piccolo (41) capably fills in for injured Gale Sayers, and field-goal specialist Mac Percival (83) scores consistently. Linebacker Dick Butkus (51) anchors the defense. In October, the Colts flattened Chicago 28-7.

Vikings. Stubborn defense kept the Vikings alive. The pass defense, led by ballhawk Paul Krause (22), is among the league's best. The solid line is anchored by end Carl Eller (81) and tackle Alan Page (88). Offensively, QB Joe Kapp (11) has a good arm—and a fine end in elusive Gene Washington (84). Bill Brown (30) and Clinton Jones (26) are solid runners. The Colts beat the Vikings 21-9 in November.

Beauty and the Beast

SPECIAL COLOR British actress Hayley Mills is the hostess and narrator for the San Francisco Ballet Company's production of Tchaikovsky's "Beauty and the Beast."

The traditional fairy tale is familiar to most: lovely Beauty, neglected by her father and stepsisters, is captured by an ugly Beast in an Enchanted Forest. She escapes, but returns when she hears that he is dying for love of her. She kisses him, and he is magically transformed into a Handsome Prince. The ballet ends as Beauty and the Prince are married, destined to Live Happily Ever After.

Tchaikovsky's music, performed by the San Francisco Ballet orchestra under the direction of Gerhard Samuel, touches dancers and audience with the charming magic of all fairy tales.

The ballet, filmed two years ago, is being seen on television for the first time this year. It was one of the films selected for showing at the 1966 Monte Carlo Centennial "American Week" Festival.

Dik Rose created the stage settings and Tony Duquette designed the costumes, which include the birds and animals of the Enchanted Forest. The San Francisco Ballet, founded in 1938, performs under the choreographic direction of Lew Christensen.

The World of Christmas

The theme is carried out by the rich resources of America's immigrant heritage. The children, dressed in colorful "old country" costumes, perform songs and dances from the lands of their fathers.

Dances include a Bavarian styrer, a Polish krakowiak, a Norwegian snus polka and African dances adapted to the Christmas story. Among the performers are children from the Folklorico de Mexico training school and the Center of African Culture.

Songs include "O Holy Night," "Adeste Fideles," "O Tannenbaum" and others that are less familiar: "Hosianna" (Sweden), "Petit Papa Noel" (France) and many folk songs. (60 min.)

THE DOAN REPORT

ment is a Presidential task force study just submitted to the White House. A real hackle-raiser for the TV establishment, the report argues that (1) the public deserves greater "diversity" in TV programming, (2) the present TV system isn't providing it, and (3) the best way to get it would be a deliberate national nurturing of cable TV, with its multiplicity of closed-circuit channels. The study group, headed by Undersecretary of State Eugene Rostow, felt that oft-promised direct-to-home satellite TV is a billion-dollar pie in the sky unlikely to come in sight soon.

SPECIAL COLOR A feeling of "hail and farewell" marks this musical hour.

It is the first of this season's "Young People's Concerts," and it is also maestro Leonard Bernstein's last season as music director and full-time conductor of the New York Philharmonic.

Bernstein conducts and discusses "Don Quixote," by Richard Strauss (1864-1949), and the choice is touched with nostalgia. "Don Quixote" was the major piece on the orchestra's program one day 25 years ago, when Bruno Walter became ill and Bernstein, then only 25, made his unexpected and critically hailed debut.

Although the tone poem is based on a simple six-note theme, no fewer than 10 major variations explore the many facets of Spain's literary hero.

Featured performers: first cellist Lorne Munroe and first violist William Lincer. Producer-director: Roger Englander. (60 min.)

TV JIBE POINT OF VIEW

The tall, lanky star, wearing scuffed cowboy boots, faded blue jeans and jacket, slumps down in a director's chair and talks about the resurgence of Glenn Ford films on television. "You know," he says, "it's a source of amazement to me that I survived some of those pictures. To survive them twice is another source of amazement."

Two of Ford's better ones—"The Rage" and "Dear Heart"—are headed for TV. Another—"Pocketful of Miracles"—is again on NBC Dec. 28. He won't say whether he includes them in the survival category, but shrugs and says he may catch "Dear Heart," "if only to watch Geraldine Page," who co-starred with him. "Not as bad as some I've done though," he adds.

Ford, now past 50, has "survived" in Hollywood for more than 30 years. He has appeared in 128 films and only recently finished "Smith!" for Disney. While many of his contemporaries, men like Dana Andrews, John Payne and Don Ameche, are no longer working regularly in feature pictures, Ford still makes three a year. His salary is approximately $250,000 a picture, a fee some agents describe as that paid "a big star on his way down, or a young guy on the way up."

Actually Glenn Ford is something of a Hollywood dinosaur, an actor who traces his movie beginnings back to the heyday of Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy and Gary Cooper. To have survived professionally all these years without now relying on character parts is more a credit to the Cooper-like chemistry he generates than to his talents. But if you ask Ford where he is today in the Hollywood-star peerage, he dismisses the question. "No actor knows that," he says. "If he tries to answer it, he's a fool. I concentrate on the film I'm making. If you start worrying about what plateau you're on, you get involved in distractions. Director George Marshall has a thing he says to actors. 'There you go, thinking again.'"

Ford obviously took Marshall's advice about acting. He doesn't "think" about it, he does it. "People laugh when I say I'm not an actor," he explains. "But I'm not. I play myself."

Ford—his real name was Gwyllyn Ford—was born in Quebec and moved to Santa Monica, Cal., when he was 8. After being graduated from high school, he worked in little-theater groups, moving furniture as an assistant stage manager, aiming spotlights at burlesque comics. He got his first acting job in 1935, the grocery boy's role in a West Coast company of "The Children's Hour." This led to a screen test and a contract at Columbia.

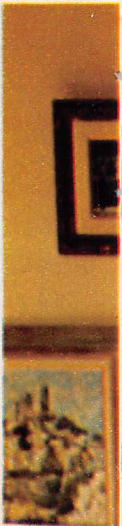

Columbia cast Ford in pictures of uneven quality. On one hand, there was "Blondie Plays Cupid." On the other hand there was a series of pictures with Rita Hayworth—then the studio's reigning glamour queen; and "Blackboard Jungle," made on loan-out to MGM, which earned him acclaim. Included in the string were 64 Westerns.

In his private life, Ford has been married twice. He wed dancer Eleanor Powell in 1943 while he was in the Marine Corps. That marriage ended in 1959. After the divorce, Ford was a bachelor about town. He was seen with Debbie Reynolds, Connie Stevens, Hope Lange and Linda Christian.

His friendship with Miss Christian was

THE MAN WHO CAME TO THE MOVIES —TO STAY

By Joseph Finnigan

to cause Ford a bit of embarrassment. Miss Christian told a Hollywood columnist one night that Ford had proposed marriage. The next day, Glenn said it was all a mistake. Miss Christian said it wasn't a mistake at all. "I'm flabbergasted," she told reporters. "He talked through three helpings of Wiener schnitzel before convincing me he was on the level. It's three times more than he usually eats. He had a glass of wine and three crepes suzette, proposing all the while." But Ford countered, "I don't want to dispute a lady's word, but this is becoming ludicrous." It all goes down in Hollywood history as the "Wiener schnitzel romance."

In 1966, Ford married 32-year-old actress Kathryn Hays. It was a short-lived union which ended earlier this year when she filed for divorce.

If Glenn Ford has an "image" in Hollywood, a town where too many people are overly concerned about exterior personalities, it can best be described as a "nonimage." "Nobody knows me," he says. And he may well be right. Those who claim to know him describe Ford in extremes. He's been called "dull," "a tightwad" and "a sophisticated world traveler who orders a grand meal and always picks up the check." Take your choice.

To get a fix on Ford's personality, you have to visit his home, a beautiful French-style $500,000 mansion behind the Beverly Hills Hotel. The home, which has been described as a "bachelor pad," has a theater-style projection room, a billiard room, a huge kitchen, a book-lined den, a private sauna bath and one of the best wine cellars in town. It is tastefully furnished and decorated with lanterns from England, tile from Italy, a chandelier from Czechoslovakia, a balustrade from New Orleans.

Ford's butler greeted me at the door and led the way to the bar, where Ford sat. It is the wall of this bar and the adjoining hallway that gives us a picture of the Glenn Ford "nobody" knows. In fact it projects several pictures of the man, some at variance with others.

There's Glenn Ford the artist whose nonrepresentative paintings decorate the entranceway. There's Ford the collector of historical memorabilia who has a hanging of original letters and poems written by Voltaire, Lincoln, Shaw, Wilde, Alexander Graham Bell, Thomas Edison, Winston Churchill, Somerset Maugham and Edwin Booth. Around the bar hang pictures of friends and people he admires, an assortment of radically different personalities. There's John Wayne and Noel Coward; Adlai Stevenson and Dwight Eisenhower. And Ford's hawkish feelings—he's a reserve U.S. Navy commander with a record of Vietnam service—are plainly evident in his collection of generals and admirals. But not far away is a photo of Joan Baez, smiling benignly among all that brass. It's as if Ford is granting equal time on his wall to the doves.

I asked him about that. "Joan Baez is a friend," he explains crisply. "If somebody doesn't like the fact I like her, that's their tough luck. They're missing something. So she disagrees with some people. There's good and bad on both sides of the political spectrum."

You can't get much more "non-image" than that.

Mickey Mouse, the world's most famous rodent, celebrates his 40th birthday this week in an hour-long NBC special on Walt Disney's Wonderful World of Color. Everybody from the Disney cartoon stable will be there—Mickey's girl friend Minnie, Donald Duck, Goofy, Pluto, Horace Horsecollar, the Seven Dwarfs. The real-life Mouseketeers will be around to celebrate the event with Dean Jones.

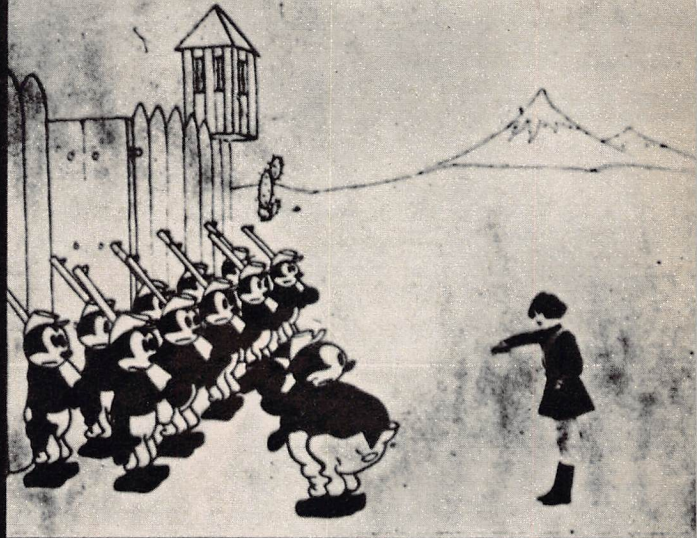

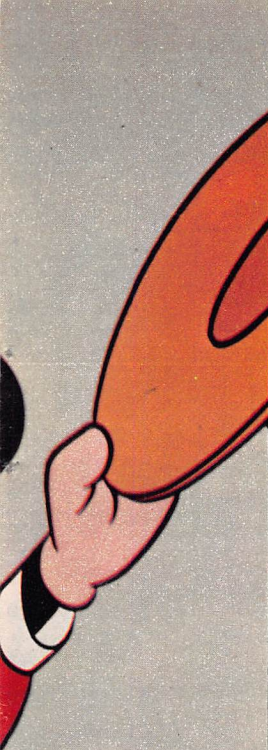

It's fitting that this honor should go to Mickey. Of all the Disney characters, he is unique. Mickey was the first popular movie-cartoon hero. He was an animated star with millions of fans who first saw him emerge in the growing movie business of the late 1920's. He hit his peak in the Thirties and has been credited with keeping Disney Studio from going bankrupt in the Depression days. His success was phenomenal. Millions of dollars were earned by his pictures and the merchandising of watches, dolls, trains and other toys.

Ward Kimball, a Disney animator since 1934 and producer of the birthday salute, says, "The sales from just one item, the $1.25 Mickey Mouse railroad handcar, helped. Three hundred thousand were sold."

But the novelty of the toys and an inexpensive wrist watch wore off. Mickey was too good a guy. His popularity diminished and he was finally retired with honors after his last cartoon in 1953, becoming a kind of Disney symbol. Kimball believes Mickey was shoved into the wings by Donald Duck, Goofy and the Seven Dwarfs, all of whom had definite personalities. He explains, "When cartoons were young, it didn't make → any difference that Mickey just ran and jumped around. But the public's taste became more discriminating. You couldn't give them a character like that. Walt was always trying to find something for Mickey to do. But Mickey had no personality and we didn't know who he was. The duck was hot-tempered; Goofy was goofy; Dopey was lovable. So when those characters came in, Mickey's popularity declined."

Then a curious thing happened. "Camp" came along. And Mickey Mouse became "in" to collectors of Americana and those who wanted the latest in fashion. Mickey Mouse watches, which originally sold for $2.98, are being peddled as collectors' items for $35 and up. The $1.50 pocket watch commands $50 or more.

Mickey was back in business. So the idea for the birthday show came about quite naturally. Kimball, sitting in his studio office surrounded by Mickey Mouse merchandising items, explains: "I called in a lot of old-timers to kick ideas around. For a week and a half we looked at every Mickey Mouse cartoon made. We brought in the Mouseketeers. Dean Jones was chosen because he could do it in a light-humored vein. And we'll also have the most requested of the Mickey Mouse cartoons—"The Band Concert"—where Mickey leads the 'William Tell Overture' during a hurricane.

"The new film makers and the kids want to see the early cartoons now. And the older people enjoy the nostalgia."

It's the final irony. Mickey—of all people—"Camp." END

Answer to puzzle of Dec. 14

Would you believe that some bowls aren't televised?

By Melvin Durslag

To the best of historians' knowledge, the concept of bowl football began in 1902 in Pasadena, where a jocular bunch decided to supplement a flower show with something muscular. Thus was born the Rose Bowl game, and, from this humble start, bowls have burgeoned like crab grass, appearing each season between the end of November and the middle of January.

At the last count, 51 bowl games existed, falling generally into two groups: (a) those certified by the National Collegiate Athletic Association and (b) those not certified.

Currently, the NCAA sanctions only 17 postseason games, meaning that most bowls you read about are outlaw. I mean, they aren't played on a barge in international waters, but they don't, for one reason or another, have the blessing of the amateur gods.

Television doesn't ask questions. That is, if it wants to air, say, the Wool Bowl, from Roswell, N.M.—this one may be played on a sheep ranch—it needn't seek permission from anyone except the sponsors of the Wool Bowl, who are apt to shear the network for a few thousand.

Most of the games, however, are televised in co-operation with the NCAA. On Dec. 14, for instance, ABC carried regionally such classics as the Boardwalk Bowl from Atlantic City; Pecan Bowl, Arlington, Texas; Grantland Rice Bowl, Murfreesboro, Tenn.; and Camellia Bowl, Sacramento, Cal.

TV also has zeroed in on the Liberty Bowl and the Astro-Bluebonnet Bowl, but has missed the Mineral Water Bowl, Potato Bowl, Rubber Bowl, Cigar Bowl and Peach Bowl.

To the general public, only a handful of the postseason games are of significance, which is to say that few sit suspensefully awaiting the outcome of the Space City Bowl in Huntsville, Ala., except the principals and their immediate relatives. Why do communities sponsor these Off-Broadway Bowls? What inspires citizens to knock themselves out donating time and energy for a show of such amoebic interest? What does it do for the municipality?

We took up this matter with the → executive director of the largest of the Off-Broadway Bowls, the Sun Bowl, which CBS will televise on Dec. 28. Now in its 34th year, the event began in El Paso in a stadium that seated 12,000. The Kiwanis was the early sponsor. Profits went to charity but rarely amounted to any sum of consequence.

"Basically," says Harrison Kohl, executive director of the game, "the Sun Bowl was started for the purpose of getting people to pay attention to El Paso. The project also provided activity for the community, and still does. Today we have 2500 people working for the game for no pay."

"What does it do for El Paso?" Kohl was asked.

"It brings visitors into town and they spend money. But, more important, it is a rallying point for the community. Parties are keyed to Sun Bowl Week. Ladies buy new hats. Excitement is created by the parade and the beauty contest and the coronation ball and all the other events connected with the Sun Carnival."

"Is it all worth the trouble?"

"It is if you like El Paso."

Happily, there are people who like El Paso, just as there are those who go for escargot and raw octopus. And the Sun Bowl is their dish in much the sense that the Tangerine Bowl excites the citizenry of Orlando, Fla.

In 1963, the Sun Bowl was moved into a new stadium accommodating 34,000, and the game this year will be making its fourth appearance on television. The fee it receives of $50,000 doesn't exactly match the seven figures hauled in by the Rose Bowl, but the magic word in the Off-Broadway Bowl business is exposure.

The Sun Bowl is so enthusiastic about the two-year contract it has signed with CBS that it will be shelling out a large part of its television money this year for an elaborate half-time show to be produced by Disneyland.

"Since we have grown," says Kohl, referring to a game that once was played between the El Paso High School All-Stars and a team from Ranger, Texas, "we have found it easier attracting good schools to our event, but bookings are still our biggest problem. On the Monday before the last week of the college season, we get busy on the phone, calling prospects all over the country. The only trouble is, other bowls are calling the same prospects. Then our problem is compounded by the fact that we must try, whenever possible, to land at least one team of local interest."

In El Paso, a team of local interest is one that comes from Texas, whether it be Abilene, Denton or Dallas.

"We aren't always successful," continues Kohl, "but we find that our game sells better when a Texas team plays."

Like the Sun Bowl, many of the Off-Broadway Bowls have remained for years in the same location. Others have died, and then there are those that have floated, like Nathan Detroit's game of chance.

Perhaps the most notable of the floaters is the Liberty Bowl, seen over ABC. This postseason spectacular began in Philadelphia, where, as a December presentation, it was anything but warmly received.

A jump ahead of bankruptcy, the game fled to Atlantic City, where it was staged in the local auditorium, more or less as a studio show for television. To the players, it still was better than December outdoors in Philadelphia.

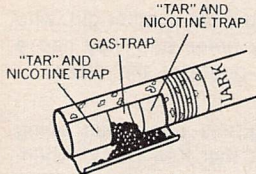

The next stop was Memphis, which took this waif to its bosom in the face of slander by an Eastern detractor, who wrote, "How can you have a Liberty Bowl in Memphis?"

The game has remained in the community for three years, which isn't as long as Boss Crump lasted, but it is showing promise.

Patiently, we are waiting for one of the teams appearing in the Liberty Bowl to ask the other, "Excuse me, but didn't we meet in Atlantic City?"

So far, there are only two cigarettes in the world with the Gas-TrapTM filter.

Filters on most cigarettes just reduce "tar" and nicotine. Lark does this and more.

King size or new 100's, Lark is the only cigarette with the Gas-TrapTM filter (U.S. Pat. No. 3,251,365). It reduces certain harsh gases nearly twice as effectively as any other filter on any popular brand.

This is important because—no matter how long a cigarette is—only a fraction of the smoke is "tar" and nicotine...about 90% is gases certain of which are harsh.

So try Lark—King size and new 100's. You can actually taste the difference the Gas-TrapTM filter makes.

This show inherits the broadcast time and the locale of the old Andy Griffith Show, as well as half a dozen characters. Among the latter are Andy himself, who appears sparingly; Goober Pyle (George Lindsey), fictional cousin of Gomer; Howard, the county clerk (Jack Dodson); and Emmett, the fix-it man (Paul Hartman); as well, of course, as Aunt Bee (Frances Bavier). Then too, the star of this new series, widower Sam Jones (Ken Berry), also made several appearances on the Griffith show last season, as did his girl friend, Millie (Arlene Golonka), and Sam's young son, Mike (Buddy Foster).

If all this seems, as Andy would put it, a sneaky way of trying to have an Andy Griffith Show without Andy Griffith, well, look at it this way: it is. But it's all to a good purpose, because—despite the fact that everything is so set up and diagramed, spelled out and hit on the head—this still manages to be a fairly interesting show. One reason for this is, we think, the fact that the emphasis here is on human nature rather than on humor—indeed, sometimes the whole show is actually sad and full of pathos. An example is a comparatively recent show: Goober wants to ask Millie to the Harvest Ball. He can't get up the nerve, however, so Sam has to write the invitation for him. Millie, of course, comes into Sam's office and is delighted to see the half-written invitation—which, when she gets it, has Goober's signature, not Sam's. She goes to the dance with Goober, but once Goober sees Millie and Sam dancing together, he also sees the light. "When two people are right for each other," he tells Sam, "there's a look that passes between them, and you can see it all the way across the dance floor. She'll never have that look for me. Maybe some day some other girl will, but not Millie." We tell you it was sad; and thank heaven Goober did get another girl, who was on her way home and they had a ball—up till all hours at the diner.

Another thing this show has going for it is the fact that Ken Berry, whom you'll remember from F Troop, is, like the scripts, not only funny but touching too. And if Aunt Bee is occasionally a bit much (remember the race-horse episode?), the fact remains that Millie is excellent. In the church play she was particularly memorable when the mean old dramatics teacher tried to do her out of cashing in on her chorus-girl past. But good as Sam and Millie and Goober and the others are, the star here is not Mr. Berry or Miss Golonka or any of the other performers, but Mayberry itself. It is no small feat to make a place as real as this town is, and we see no reason why, with every so often a whole new half-cast of characters being added, this show can't go on forever.

Now, pudding is cherry pie.

We cannot tell a lie.

If George Washington had tasted this pie, he'd never have chopped down the cherry tree.
